Summer Term | Issue No.27

Dear Holy Trinity Community,

I would like to take this opportunity to write about our wonderful Year 6 children at the end of a very important week.

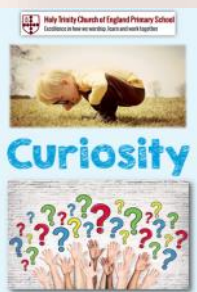

Year 6 children across the country have been sitting their SATS (Standard Assessment Tests) this week. They have been tested on their grammar, spelling, punctuation, reading, arithmetic and mathematical reasoning. These tests are designed to show how much progress the children have made from the end of Year 2 to the end of Year 6. It is clear that a child's progress and knowledge cannot solely be judged on how a child performs in six tests over four days. However, it is still an important week for the children and the school.

The last couple of years have been incredibly challenging, and our Year 6 children have needed to demonstrate resilience, perseverance and determination to overcome the learning time lost due to the pandemic. The fact that they have arrived at school on time every day this week, positive and keen to show just how much they know, is testament to their great attitudes, and the wonderful support they have received from our staff.

Irrespective of the results, which we will receive in July, we are incredibly proud of this group of children and we look forward to celebrating their last two months at Holy Trinity in style.

Kind regards,

Mr Winn

The Worm

This term in assemblies I'm working through one of the most well known passages from the Bible – it's the section on Love, which is often read out at weddings. "Love is patient and kind; it is never jealous, boastful, proud or rude..." and so on.

This week we thought about jealousy – and what better topic for Mental Health Awareness Week.

Most of us have had the odd pang of jealousy in our lives. When I was talking with the children, it brought back memories of when I was at school. Every year I thought I might win one of the prizes or be appointed as a monitor, but it never happened and I was always just a little bit jealous of those who gained such accolades.

Fortunately, I had enough other things going on in my life for these pangs to be nothing more. Because jealousy is one of those things that if you don't control it, it will control you. It's like a little worm or parasite inside you. If you give room to it, and especially if you feed it, it will only grow. If you let your jealous thoughts multiply they will soon threaten to rule your mind. From there it's only a short step to wishing ill of the people you're jealous of. And that's why St Paul said "Love is never jealous."

When jealousy is allowed to flourish, it's like an aggressive weed that takes over the garden. It's bad news for us and our mental health, it's bad news for those we feel bitter towards, and that means it's bad news for a whole family or community.

So what's the antidote to jealousy? What medicine can we take to tame this parasite feasting on our guts? The antidote is to practise contentment; to actively thank God for what we have got rather than dwell on what we haven't got; and (and this may be a step too far!) to try to be pleased for the blessing that others enjoy even when we don't have them. Do this, and you'll feel really liberated!

St Paul wrote, "I have learned to be content in all situations." He had to learn it. It wasn't something that came without effort. But for St Paul, as for us, this was a real battle for mental health – and it's a battle worth winning!

God bless,

Reverend Dormandy

Enriched Learning

As part of Yr2 Children's Topic on Ballet, they had an amazing day out to the Swan Lake Concert at the prestigious Royal Opera House.

The trip provided them with a rich learning experience, and also enhanced their understanding of how the arts can impact our lives.

Mental Health Awareness Week

To celebrate World Mental Health Week, our children have been completing random acts of kindness.

For every act they've completed children have written down and illustrated their acts on a post-it notes and added it to create whole class posters.

In particular we have been thinking about people who feel lonely and how we can help them by being kind. Here are some of the kind acts that have been recorded.
